A Hell Of Woman Jim

A Hell of a Woman is a tale very nearly from the James M. Cain mold. Man meets woman, bumps off someone in order to be with her, then quickly descends into madness. Frank Dillon coming unglued is a testament to Jim Thompson's skill as a writer. As things start coming unraveled, Frank's cracking is very believable.

Editions of A Hell of a Woman by Jim Thompson - Goodreads

A HELL OF A WOMAN is a hell of a book, but if you've read much Jim Thompson you know that already. This isn't one of his better known novels I suppose -- at least, I hadn't heard a lot about it -- but it does have his signature plot turns and a lot of punch. This is a fast read, and not just because it's a pretty short book.

Jim Thompson is a good writer. He writes hard-boiled style fiction that tends to feature dark and reprehensible characters. A Hell of a Woman was a decent read with a great ending. Thompson's ability to transfer paranoia from his protagonist to the reader is commendable, but the true shining light of the novel occurs at final pages of the novel.

While Jim Thompson approached storytelling with a journalist's eye and bare-bones prose, he could also be experimental at times (most notably in Hell of a Woman, when the narrator suffers a break with reality and the ensuing prose veers into William S. Burroughs territory, and The Golden Gizmo which features, yes, a talking dog. Sort of.).
