In the Midst of Life We Are in Death. This modern position is the opposite of the Christian view, which has always seen death not as the end of life because, in the words of the Latin Requiem Mass, vita mutatur, non tollitur — life alters, it is not taken away. If eternal life does not start at death but continues the life we have led on this earth,...

The Book of Common Prayer, part 4: In the midst of life. The truth is the exact opposite. Before modern times the unjust and random nature of fate was inescapable. Death was no stranger, and contemplating your end was not an exercise for a retreat, but the inevitable consequence, half the time, of going out in the streets. In the midst of life you were in death.
