48 James Herbert

'48 is a 1996 alternative history novel by British horror author James Herbert. The book follows an American pilot stranded in a dystopian London after Adolf Hitler, moments before being completely defeated, uses a biological weapon in the shape of V-2 missiles, that mostly wipes out the human race.

'48 (novel) - Wikipedia

Slowly but surely working my way through back catalogue of the late great James Herbert. '48 was a departure for him, not so much horror as a dystopian alternate history. As the title suggests, set in the post WW2 England (London to be specific), the plot follows an American pilot who has been surviving in the war ravaged city.

48 James Herbert. Not as good as the Fog and noway as good as the Rats trilogy, but not that bad either. I enjoyed the alternate historical line that James took but got so dammed frustrated that the hero was once again an American, as the book was set in London, what was wrong with a Brit? I suppose he had to pander to the American market.

'48 (Audiobook) by James Herbert | Audible.com

Hoke, our hero, is an American airman eking out an existence, while hiding from the Blackshirts, a group of Nazi sympathizers. Accompanied by his faithful pooch Cagney, he spars with the Blackshirts on and off, until one day he comes across other survivors. As usual James Herbert writes a good story, with a very realistic wartime London atmosphere.
