To address more precisely what your OP asks - Why should we do anything - I would say that we already are doing something. Whether we are aware of it or not and be sure our nearest and dearest are, we have a pattern of behaviour, an MO. The unexamined life is a poorly adapted one because very often our assumptions are what block our progress.

My laziness is starting to become a problem and I really can't stand it anymore. I don't do anything at all. I'm not in sports (granted, I've never been that athletic), and the hobbies I have picked up over the years just seem like chores now. I'm even too lazy to do things I used to enjoy. I used to love painting and sketching, I even tried picking up guitar but became uninterested quickly.
