After Me Comes The Flood

After Me Comes The Flood. One hot summer's day, John Cole decides to leave his life behind. He shuts up the bookshop no one ever comes to and drives out of London. When his car breaks down and he becomes lost on an isolated road, he goes looking for help, and stumbles into the grounds of a grand but dilapidated house.

After Me Comes The Flood by Sarah Perry - Goodreads

I came to After Me Comes The Flood on the back of the exuberance and inventive delight of Perry's second novel, The Essex Serpent. Perry's first book in some ways shows it is just that, clinging a little too closely to a creative writing course, composed of some excellent ideas, evident depth and craft, but not quite seamlessly connecting and connected.

After Me Comes the Flood by Sarah Perry review – a remarkable debut. On the surface, it seems straightforward: after 35 days of drought, a man named John Cole abandons his London bookshop and sets out, purely on impulse, to visit his brother on the Norfolk coast. The heatwave has left him bewildered and irrational, however,...

After Me Comes the Flood by Sarah Perry review - a ...

After Me Comes the Flood. After Me Comes the Flood is written in deceptively straightforward prose that gradually yields a profound sense of foreboding. A house and the mysteries it contains; a disconcerting, dark reservoir to which everyone's attention returns; and a most unsettling sense of place - all made me think of Fowles' The Magus,...

After Me Comes the Flood. When Will went to take a piss, he thought the puddle by the blue bathmat was a wet footprint that one of them had left getting out of the shower. Only when a drop tapped the crown of his head did he look up to find a yellowish patch spreading across the ceiling like a sweat stain.

After Me Comes the Flood - [PANK]

"Après nous, le déluge" ("After us, the flood") is a French expression, attributed to Madame de Pompadour, the lover of King Louis XV of France. An alternative form, attributed to Louis himself, is "Après moi, le déluge" ("After me, the flood"). The saying came after the Battle of Rossbach in 1757, which was disastrous for the French.
