Poetry review: Incarnadine by Mary Szybist Okay. True confession. Most of the time I don't "get" poetry. I often like poetry but usually only pieces or bits of a poem sing out to me. Those songs, however, usually speak directly to my heart so I am swept away with the sound of the words and the emotions that are generated.

Poetry review: Incarnadine by Mary Szybist

In prose, narrative is the text's body, while in poetry it is language: the word made flesh. How appropriate then that Mary Szybist should use a similar transmutation — the annunciation of ...
