Heroin earned the nickname "horse" because it kicks equines into overdrive. Morphine and other opiates, which lull humans to sleep, also trigger the ancient equine flight response. In the wild, pursued by predators, a horse runs as fast as he can or dies. Given narcotics, a horse feels unnatural sleepiness creeping into his nervous system--sleepiness...

They say that love can be found in the unlikelyst of places. If you're not a horse person, finding love at a racetrack would probably qualify as one of those unlikely — if not totally strange — places. But if you've spent enough time either going to the races or working at the track, it's not all that far-fetched to imagine romances being sparked over conversations about
